

Meg Brauch is a 2000 honors graduate of UConn's Animal Science program. She is the owner, trainer, and manger at Narnia Stables in Ashford, CT. She sought a different approach to training and began studying Straightness Training in the summer of 2013 because she felt that there were missing links in her dressage training and background. Since then she has become an active member of the Straightness Training Academy program and to date is the only trainee Instructor in the United States. She wholeheartedly believes in the program and the approach to training and seeks to help horse owners develop a better connection and understanding of their animals through teaching ST.
